

Preparing for Back-to-School: Legal Tips for Parents

NEWSLETTER: ISSUE 05

Michele,

As the back-to-school season approaches, parents are busy with shopping lists, school supplies, and adjusting to new routines.

However, it's also a critical time to address any legal matters that might impact your child's school year. Whether you're updating custody agreements or ensuring both parents are on the same page regarding school decisions, taking these steps now can help prevent conflicts later.

Review and Update Custody Agreements:

Ensure your custody agreement is up-to-date, reflecting any changes in your circumstances, such as work schedules or relocation. If necessary, work with a family lawyer to modify the agreement to better suit the upcoming school year.

Involve Both Parents in School Decisions

Co-parenting requires collaboration, especially when it comes to your child's education. Make sure both parents are involved in decisions about which school the child attends, participation in extracurricular activities, and other educational matters. Clear communication can prevent misunderstandings and ensure both parents are informed and engaged.

Plan for Transportation and Extracurricular Activities

Discuss and coordinate transportation arrangements for the school year, including who will be responsible for drop-offs, pick-ups, and attending school events. Additionally, decide on extracurricular activities and how the costs and time commitments will be managed.

Communicate with the School

Inform the school of your custody arrangement to ensure that both parents receive important communications, such as report cards, parent-teacher conference notices, and other school-related updates. This helps maintain transparency and ensures that both parents stay informed about their child's academic progress.

Prepare for the Unexpected

Life is unpredictable, and situations may arise that require flexibility. Whether it's a sudden change in work schedules or an emergency, having a plan in place can help you navigate these challenges without disrupting your child's education.
